An article published on the Internet on the most respected professions in 35 countries placed the Nursing profession in sixth place. In first place was the medical profession, followed by lawyers (2nd), engineers (3rd), school headmasters (4th) and police officers (5th) [1].

Several factors contribute to this order of values, with relevance to the social prestige of the professionals, however, if we value the professional act, as the main factor of evaluation, the Nursing profession has many possibilities of occupying the first place in the ranking!

It is not like the lawyer a court environment or like the Engineer an engineering work to impress the public. The work of a nurse is done in a relationship with the patient, usually in a nursing room or on a ward, without making a spectacle of yourself! Their work is also indispensable for the success of the ongoing treatment.

The Nurses are the professional who suffers a very strong empathic component, with the patient, due to the close and prolonged relationship established during nursing procedures. This effect often causes emotional suffering, which may persist after the end of the duty shift, upon returning home.

We live to serve and not to be served and the professional activity of nursing represents one of the noblest expressions of human service. The availability and empathy of this profession has a humble way of being, which gives it even more beauty in its professional action! I remind you that humility has great value for God and that it makes God smile when he looks at a nurse at work! [2].
